

LIFTS at PPR Sri Aman in Jinjang, Kuala Lumpur were shut down for short periods to facilitate repair works.

Kuala Lumpur City Hall (DBKL) in a statement said operation logs from December 2023 to April 2024 showed that Block A lifts were not operational for just five days.

"Three of the days in March were to repair the wire rope and two this month were to fix the cam bearing for the doors.

"Other than that, the lifts operated as usual according to the standard speed specifications for public housing which is 105 megapascals," according to the DBKL Corporate Planning Department.

City Hall was responding to StarMetro's report, "Lift woes plague PPR Sri Aman folk," published on April 13.

Residents had claimed that usually only one or two lifts would be operational at a time.

They also said the lifts moved slowly and some lift buttons were not working.

Community activist Yee Poh Ping had attributed the issue to improper use and limited lifespan of the amenity.

DBKL acknowledged the damage to the hall call button on the 10th floor of the block, and attributed this to vandalism.

"DBKL is awaiting delivery of new components for the board and fabricated plate.

"Installation work is expected to be completed by the end of April," said the statement.

DBKL stressed the need for responsible usage by residents.

"Improper actions such as riding motorcycles into lifts can damage them," the media statement said. — By ETHEL SIAO

RESIDENTS of PPR (People's Housing Project) Sri Aman Block A are calling on Kuala Lumpur City Hall (DBKL) to take prompt action to resolve the faulty lift issue at their flats in Jinjang, Kuala Lumpur.

Peter Leong, 64, claimed that the lifts broke down almost every day.

"Despite this block having three lifts, usually only one or two are operational and they move slowly, resulting in about a 15-minute wait each time we call for a lift," said Leong who has been residing in Block A for six months.

"There have been cases of people getting stuck in the lift and the Fire and Rescue Department had to be called for help," he said.

Despite regular efforts by maintenance workers to repair the lifts, Leong said they continued to break down.

A. Valliamma, who has been staying at the flats for six years, said the lift breakdowns since December last year had caused a lot of inconvenience for residents, especially the elderly and those with limited mobility.

"What is worse is that one set of the lift buttons at our 10th floor is completely out of order while the other set is only linked to one lift.

"So, we are sometimes forced to walk to the ninth floor to use the lifts.

"Despite multiple complaints lodged with the DBKL office at our flats, it appears that there is no permanent fix to our problem," said the 62-year-old.

Kepong community activist Yee Poh Ping attributed the faulty lift problem to improper use and the lifespan of the lifts.

"I was told that some residents ride their motorcycles in and out of the lifts.

"The lifts are also subjected to high usage on a daily basis.

"Previously they were prone to vandalism, but that problem reduced when protective panels were installed," he said.

While there are four blocks totalling 1,600 units at PPR Sri Aman, Yee said Block A records the most severe lift problems. He urged the officer on duty at the flats to check on the facilities regularly, which might help in reducing potential damage and improve cleanliness.
